Save MOCA arm bands by Lizzie Jordan

Today's the day MOCA will survive or perish; be sold off in bits or unify and strengthen, blend into LACMA's already enormous, god-like presence in the LA art world, or remain a solo entity that brightens the hearts and minds of those in Downtown LA and the Urth caffe latte-sippers at the end of Melrose who like to go to the Pacific Design Center.

According to Facebook's MOCA Mobilization, the trustees are meeting today to make a decision on how to bail out MOCA. My personal hope is of course for MOCA to remain a separate entity, to lean on Superman philanthropist Eli Broad for help, and raise the rest of the money to stay afloat. It also can be a great time to sit down with marketing to re-configure up ways to keep it fresh, although not to say they haven't already with events like Finishing School's first Thursdays, Create Fixate, and MOFOMA. Helps to have young movers and shakers and serious art lovers like MOCA's grant writer Elizabeth Jordan down
