Hot Sites

Early Vegas

What happens in Vegas ... becomes American mythology, actually. Revel in the surreal at this pictorial tribute to a century of construction, competition and destruction in the Nevada desert, with lush representation of everything from the earliest saloons to the Rat Pack era's swank and the subsequent rounds of practically compulsive reinventions. The site proprietors unearthed a remarkable variety of images for your edification; be advised, however, that some contain mild nudity – just like the city, in fact. — HSS

The Baseball Cube

Fantasy-league addicts should just go ahead and change their home page to this one, we figure: Wall-to-wall baseball stats with an emphasis on the minors, info that's exceedingly hard to find elsewhere. That's not all, either – proprietor Gary Cohen's got information from independent-league play and college ball, as well as (heaven help us) transaction data. You will not find a more well-rounded statistic picture of baseball as it's played in the Western Hemisphere. — HSS

Delocator

The site for that well-known coffee chain will happily tell you where you can find the Sign of the Mermaid if you're in need, but what if you want to avoid the behemoth? This nifty site can point you to independently owned coffee shops, with all the variety and atmosphere that implies. If you know of a java joint that's not represented, you can submit information for the benefit of others. — HSS
